

When water leaves the drinking water supply system and flows into your toilet tank the water should be prevented from being drawn back into the water supply. The water in the toilet tank is often treated with cleansing chemicals that are not safe to drink. There is something you can do! Make sure an anti-siphon ballcock assembly is installed correctly in your toilet tank. This will protect against any back-siphonage.